Australian Pacific Economic Cooperation Committee

Grace Gown is Xero's Head of Global Public Policy, leading the development of policy positions that guide Xero's engagement with governments and regulators worldwide. Her work focuses on the intersection of technology and small business policy—covering areas such as digital transformation, data access, payments, and AI—ensuring that small businesses can thrive in an increasingly digital and connected economy.

Grace works across government, industry, and international forums to shape policy outcomes that enable innovation while safeguarding practical, small business-friendly implementation. She has a strong track record in developing detailed submissions and driving collaborative solutions that support sustainable economic growth across the Asia-Pacific.

Before joining Xero, Grace was Head of Global Government Advisory at Access Partnership, a global technology policy consultancy, where she advised companies, governments, and multilateral organisations—including APEC, PECC, ABAC, and ASEAN—on digital economy and trade policy frameworks. Earlier in her career, she worked within the public sector, including a government department and an inquiry, providing her with a deep understanding of policymaking processes and how to deliver evidence-based recommendations that achieve real-world outcomes.
